Dr. Dane Russo

Dr. Dane Russo is the Chief Scientist and Technologist for NASA’s Habitability and Environmental Factors Division. He has worked at the Johnson Space Center for more than 20 years. During that period he served in many different management capacities and gained valuable experience in space medical operations, space human factors engineering, and environmental health. One of his current duties is Project Manager for the development of the new Space Human System Standard and the accompanying Human Integration Design Book.