The President's Vision for Space Exploration embraces a spiral exploration mission development set. The missions will require chemical and biological environmental monitoring in order to support human health as well as health of the spacecraft habitat life support systems. This presentation will discuss the employment of this set of spirals in the context of supplying appropriate capability for chemical and biological monitoring for each mission spiral while simultaneously developing needed monitoring capability for future spirals.